

THE WAR DAY BY DAY

Fifty Years Ago.

November 20, 1863—Gen. Grant Was Obligated to Cancel Orders for an Attack Upon the Confederate Army in Front of Chattanooga on the Following Day, as Gen. W. T. Sherman Was Unable to Reach the Position Assigned Him in the Plan of Battle—Causes of Delay.

(Written expressly for The Herald.)

Fifty years ago today Gen. Grant was obliged to cancel orders for an attack he had planned to open the next morning on the Confederate army under Gen. Braxton Bragg in front of Chattanooga, as Gen. W. T. Sherman had been unable to reach the position assigned him in Grant's plan of battle.

Historical importance attaches to the situation, thus turning upon the movements of Gen. Sherman. Sherman has been charged with slowness in reaching Chattanooga, to which he had marched from Memphis, and with tardiness in getting into position after his arrival there. Study of the records indicates that he did everything possible to overcome obstacles to a rapid advance that proved insuperable. His march from Memphis had been retarded in the beginning by orders from Washington to repair the Memphis and Charleston Railroad as he proceeded.

As this road was along the northern border of the Confederacy for the entire distance to be traveled, and Confederate cavalry broke it as fast as it could be rebuilt, such a course was mere waste of time. It had been imposed on Sherman by General-in-Chief Henry W. Halleck, who, in his office in Washington, adhered to old-style military tenets and believed that no others were practicable. Thus, tered after crossing the Tennessee at Bridgeport.

The road at first lay along the river to Shellmound, beyond which it turned into the mountains. Here it was narrow and steep, a succession of rocky stretches and muddy pools.

Animals could scarcely pull the wagons over the best parts of the road, and in the worst they came to a standstill. Men struggled on doggedly, and in almost every mile of the way were obliged to get into the mud to put their shoulders to the wheel of a gun or a wagon. In the steep places guns and wagons were drawn up with ropes.

To add to the difficulty of the march a cold rain began on November 20 to pour upon the struggling columns while they were yet in the mountain passes.

On the afternoon of the 20th Gen. Sherman rode down from the hills into the camp of Gen. Hooker's command—the troops that had come from Virginia—in the Lookout Valley. He was wet and weary. Calling on Gen. Hooker to learn the state of affairs at the front, he pressed on to Brown's Ferry, on the river west of Chattanooga.

Here he was met by Grant's order for an attack on the following morning. It was impossible for Sherman to fulfill the part assigned him, for his troops when it was proposed to send two corps of the Army of the Potomac from Virginia to Chattanooga, Gen. Halleck had informed the President the transfer would take three months. Through the assistance of railroad men it was effected in seven days.

In the case of Sherman's advance Gen. Halleck's order prevailed until Gen. Grant was put in supreme command in the West, on October 15. On reaching Chattanooga, October 23, and seeing the state of affairs in the besieged town, Grant forthwith had ordered Sherman to cut loose from the railroad and advance with all speed across country.

This Sherman had done, his advance column reaching Bridgeport, Tenn., twenty-eight miles west of Chattanooga, on November 21. From that point it was necessary for the entire command, then numbering about 20,000 men, to cross the mountains with their wagons and guns to Lookout Valley, near Chattanooga.

Earlier obstacles to the march seemed trifling in connection with those encountered traversed by the railroad—now wrecked and disused—to Lookout Valley.

The whole command was under orders to proceed with all possible speed to Brown's Ferry, and there again cross the Tennessee.

Far into the night of the 20th the troops tottered over the feeble roads in the mountains. At daylight, on the 21st, the head of the column was crossing the mountain brimming full of the muddy tide approaching flood pitch. The boats of the bridge veered and tugged at their lines, and the plank roadway trembled and swayed as the troops holding the boats parted, and the bridge broke. Then followed delays while men repaired it, with great exertion, and the halted troops shivered in the rain on the river bank.

One Division Cut Off.

All through that day and the next officers and men of the army waited in the mud, or marched slowly through the mud toward the hills north of Chattanooga.

On the afternoon of November 22 Gen. Ewing's division arrived at the ferry, after a hard march from Trenton, and crossed in safety.

Then the bridge broke in such a way that it could not be mended.

An entire division of Sherman's command, that of Peter J. Osterhaus, was cut off. Sherman could not wait for the water to subside and permit the rebuilding of the bridge. Therefore, he had to leave the division where it was, to join the command of Gen. Hooker, while the other he struggled on into the hills north of Chattanooga, where at last, on the afternoon of the 23d, he reached the position that Grant had hoped he would reach on the 20th.

The movement of Sherman's troops across the river had been observed by the Confederates, who had seen the three divisions that got over the bridge, among the hills north of Chattanooga. They had seen the purpose for which Sherman was marching, which was again to cross the river, north of Chattanooga, and come into the battle line in front of the extreme Confederate right, where he was not expected.

Gen. Grant had succeeded in deceiving the enemy as to Sherman's destination by a clever stratagem. One of the army corps under Gen. Hooker, the Eleventh, commanded by Gen. O. Howard, had been sent ahead of Sherman's troops, and without being observed had been marched into the hills north of Chattanooga.

When Sherman's columns had passed out of view of the Confederates, Howard's troops were counter-marched into Chattanooga in full view of the Confederates, who assumed that they were the main body of the army, and that they were crossing the river at Brown's Ferry.

Thus on the eve of battle Grant was enabled to conceal 20,000 men in a position from which they could open the engagement with an attack on the extreme right of the Confederate Army, where Gen. Bragg did not expect attack.

The three days' fighting for Chattanooga will be described November 23, 24, and 25.

Tomorrow: Blockade running at Wilmington.

ANACOSTIANS ASKING FOR NEW HIGH SCHOOL

Dr. George C. Haverhaver Heads Movement for Building to Be Located in Suburb.

Dr. George C. Haverhaver, president of the Anacostia Improvement Association, is advocating the erection of a high school in the suburb of Anacostia. Dr. Haverhaver shows that the building could be erected cheaper in the eastern section than in the northwest because of the cheaper price that would be paid for the land. Dr. Haverhaver intends to create, if possible, enough interest in the matter to induce the officials to give consideration to the project. Civic bodies will be asked to take action on the proposition.

Dr. William Watson and Irving Bury, of Nichols Avenue, Anacostia, are moving to Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina.

The officers of the various Masonic bodies in Anacostia are closing their work for the present year this month. The new officers of the Anacostia Lodge No. 21, F. & A. M., Electa Chapter No. 2, Order of the Eastern Star, and Anacostia Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Chapter, will be installed on December 1st.

Fifty lodges were served with supper yesterday in the basement hall of Emmanuel Episcopal Church in V Street by the members of the Ladies' Guild of the parish.

The United States Realty Company, of Washington, has moved to the corner of Minnesota and Pennsylvania Avenues, in the new building. This company was formerly located at 1000 K Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest.
